

Murdering your own child

Begins in energy. Before anything physical.

A child that is growing up with a parent unable to acknowledge themselves will become a pain and a burden for that parent.

Why is because the parent is so far away from loving themselves that the child's need for attention and love cannot be given. You cannot give what you do not have. So as they try to receive love and affection from the parent that cannot give this to the child as they cannot give this to themselves will become "a trouble child".

But there is no problem initially with the child.

The main and only problem is the parent living under the conviction that they are mature & in understanding what love is. Which is completely false. What made them even get a child was in search of love. That originates from having a "loving" relationship with somebody in the same misconception as themselves. All is attraction. All is energy. All is created and designed this way for us to learn in the reflection of others. To come closer and learn more about what love truly is.

But as the parents that are allegedly grown ups fail to acknowledge themselves the cannot acknowledge each other and further more not be able to acknowledge their kids. The best solution for all of this would be to not have any kids. But the primary solution would be to not get involved in a "romantic" relationship at all with anyone else before you are loving and compassionate in relation to yourself.

No child is broken. And neither is any sexually mature human being either.

But there is sometimes a great deal of confusion in what love is and also in relation to the misconception that you are "done" and "in understanding" just because you've reached a certain physical age.

The murder of your own child is all energy and all spirit. It's being far from spirit yourself which is the ultimate truth and soul of who you are. And as a child comes into this world in the image of yourself, that will cause a lot of pain due to the nature of them being more spiritual than anyone else that has become more rational and devious in nature towards the emotional truth of who they are.

It's more or less a game of jealousy as the child is free and the parent is not. From within in spirit. So the trouble and problematics of the child are actually what is needed to be experienced inside the parent but becomes suffocated in the child instead because the truth hurts when you are living a lie.

That's why someone young who is naturally curious and creative will be medicated and numbed to fit the environment and lifestyle of the stressed and busy parent that tries to get it all together in the outside environment instead of the inside environment.

Life is all about the inside out.

And the child has their main role models in life which naturally are the parents. So if the parent is living a lie in terms of understanding what love, spirit and truth is within them they will live in a world that is telling them one thing. But they will feel something completely different. This is because children are natural lie detectors as they are closer to truth. But will become so polarized by the manipulation of their parent that they live in a world of confusion.

Just as their parents are experiencing as they refuse to actually grow up and become mature and responsible for their own inner, spiritual environment. The parent is many times more immature than the child in the perspective of being the one supposed to be taking responsibility.

So many times the child we become a rebellion against the system. Which is the product of fighting against their parents rational mind far from emotions and humanity. This will manifest in relation to the parent but as the child gets older it will become a problem in society as this rage and abuse needs an outlet in the complete misunderstanding of its origin.

Or the child might become the achiever that cleans the house and looks after the younger siblings as they are forced to be more mature in what they believe that is coming from an immature environment of dysfunction.

The child dies in spirit.

As this goes on as the parent refuses to become humble before God, before Love. The child suffers as they are forever connected spiritually, emotionally. And they will mistreat themselves in accordance to their spirit being discarded from their parent telling them they love them and so they believe that this is a way of caring for oneself.

A suicide from either destructive abuse in any form or a sudden choice to end ones life is a product of a spirit unacknowledged which is the parent failing to give the child what they fail to give themselves.

So if the parent comes to the point of maximum frustration about everything that is happening in relation to emotional confusion within themselves they can eventually kill the problem. And that is correct. The must kill the problem.

But the problem is not the child. And the problem is not themselves.

The problem is lack of gratitude and humility for their own life as they are a product of parents just like they've become. And so this goes on for generations until someone has the desire to set things straight and correct the family heritage of destructive behavior. That can only happen from awareness. And that cannot happen unless there is a will to desire change. When you desire change for the better and you begin to make yourself objectively aware of what is actually going on and why? You get the opportunity to take responsibility and learn more about who you truly are and why you behave the way you do. And then you can grow emotionally and become more compassionate towards yourself and to your own environment that you grew up in and learn thru forgiveness that everybody acts in frustration creating pain and pressure that we either solve outside or inside of ourselves.

That's why you can never in the history of all humanity place responsibility for yourself in the outside environment. There is just no way you can blame anyone or any God for anything. You have the responsibility to be humble before Love. And that is the truth about stating that you actually don't know what love is. But you have a deep desire to learn more as you wish to feel as much love as possible in relation to yourself. And also to be able to actually give what you now have.

We are born pure and loving. But our dysfunctional environment teaches us a false idea of what love is. And mostly that is material, as in sexual. But love is free. Just like a child is. That's what hurts the most as you see the child adapting and becoming molded in front of your own eyes to become further away from the beautiful innocent all loving being the originally where coming into this world. The parent that is always being negative and condescending or even punishing and mean to a child? Is trying to tell the child:

DO NOT DO THAT! THAT IS THE WRONG WAY TO CARE FOR YOURSELF AND OTHERS!

Which is what somebody unable to be constructive in relation to themselves have to offer in trying to teach someone else. That's all they know. That's what they got taught by their parents whom they saw as role models and began to be indoctrinated with lies and misconceptions of what love truly is.

History repeats itself until we change it. And it gets worse and worse until it becomes so sever that we either understand all of this. Or we become numb and accept this as a particular behavior in certain individuals that are plainly sick in head.

Something very judgemental and chronicle. Which is all a lie and a rational idea in complete emotional disconnection from spirit and what love truly is. Where we cannot understand so we cannot forgive and we cannot ever heal as we condemn all of the behavior in fear of being humane. We are not rebellions against the system but we are a part of the system that cleans and maintains order to be responsible for the immature behavior of our own brothers and sisters.

Sometimes to the degree that we wish to kill the problem and troubled human being that simply doesn't understand love. We want to see them dead and get rid of the problem. Instead of looking at ourselves and becoming more mature and emotionally understanding so that we can heal each others instead.

Nothing just happens. There is always a reason behind it. Some form of neglecting causes rebellion. And that is not because you did not get what you materially wanted. It's because you've been neglected spiritually and emotionally which is what constitutes a human being. A create of love and connection to nature. To God. Which is all about being free inside without any condemnation or judgement regarding your self-worth, appreciation, gratitude & humility for the life you've been given. When you feel all that which is to relate back to truth and what love is in all your interactions you are connected within. Then you can connect with others. Like a beautiful, creative, curios and spontaneous child. Whom is living life without a care in the world just because they are naturally in love with themselves.